

ENC 4354: Writing for Nonprofits

WF 9:30-10:50 AL 240

In this course we will direct our writing and rhetorical skills outside the classroom in order to think about writing as an instrument for social change. By volunteering with a local nonprofit organization for at least two hours each week, you will learn about the nonprofit world and research a specific community issue or problem. This course will provide you with real-world professional writing experience and knowledge!

This class is particularly well-suited for students majoring in English looking to learn about possible career paths, as well as students majoring in Communication, Social Work, Education, students interested in professional writing, public policy and/or non-profit organizations, or anyone interested in hands-on learning. This course counts toward the English Major, Nonprofit Management Minor, and the Certificate in Professional and Technical Writing.
